Research

Implications of Changing to Math Reform Curriculum in Upper Elementary

This two year research project was based on a small control group at a school with more than 70% free/reduced lunch in the years 1995-97. Students in the experimental group were instructed in math reform methods, using ER&D’s Thinking Math approach as the foundation for instruction. Comparison with the control group showed major gains on scores of experimental group members in conceptual math items on standardized tests. Published in The Right Angle Winter 1999.
